The harsh Australian Outback is the dramatic setting for Detective Inspector Napoleon Bonaparte's (Bony) latest case. In a distant, desolate sheep station, two men have been brutally murdered, and Bony is just the sleuth for the job. He is half Aborigine and uses his deep understanding of the land, the people, and the country's strange and unusual flora and fauna as he finds minute, seemingly insignificant, evidence buried in the dusty soil. This communion with nature in Upfield's vivid imagery, paired with colorful idioms, often leads to the most telling of clues. Peter Hosking's performance reflects the harsh Outback with his melodious Australian accent, overlaid by gruff, husky expression. One can almost hear the parched essence of the backcountry drought in his crackled speech. A.W. © AudioFile 2011, Portland, Maine

Detective-Inspector Napoleon Bonaparte is called to the drought-stricken outback for this, his latest case. At a desolate sheep station two men have been savagely beaten to death and it's Bony's job to make an arrest. This isn't an easy case, since clues are scarce in this sun-baked, sand-blown country, but Bony's understanding of the bush and the people who live there - both black and white - leads him inexorably to the killer...

Good read from a wonderful Series

By Dixie

Just recently started reading Upfield's "Bony" series. Good solid stories set in the wilds of Australia in the '20 through the 1950s. Those not familiar with the Aussie English may be put off at first--especially since these books were written in a time of some older downunder terms here and there. If the reader finds a need to determine a term, phrase, or word used in these books there are several good web sites that will give help in dictionary style. Just search "Australian Speak".

Classic Upfield

By Cloggie Downunder

Bony and the Black Virgin, also published under the title, The Torn Branch, is the 24th novel in the Bony series by Arthur Upfield. In this instalment, Bony travels to drought-stricken outback NSW to investigate the murder of two men. By the time he arrives, some six months have passed since the discovery of the bodies, so it takes the talents of a detective like Bony to uncover clues in this sun-baked, sand-blown country. There are plenty of puzzling clues for the reader, with a surprising ending: in this case, even Bony got the killer and the motive wrong. Upfield also shares his extensive knowledge of the country and the effects of a long-lasting drought, and the eventual breaking of it, on the landscape, the fauna and the people. Bony makes plenty of "alleged cigarettes", educates the reader on the properties of gibber deserts, and goes duck shooting. Using Bony as a mouthpiece, Upfield offers opinions on the way the intelligence and sophistication of the blacks is underestimated and how they are educated but offered no employment to make use of that intelligence and education. Classic Upfield.

Never received this

By Who cares

Funny thing about this I was going to order this book but never did. Also different is that the author is from Austrila as is the character. I use to get these books out of the library ages ago then the library not only stop buying the new books (if any) but eventually put them on the trash rack. In the mean time I never received it nor did I order it. So take a tip from me and before you hit the send button go over what you ordered....
